 fascinating limp who once invented what he called The Perfect Mousetrap but what you'd probably call an old brick painted yellow with CHEESE written on the side, at which he'd fling it across the room and split your head open. "Now, if you'd been a mouse," he'd say. So yes, late, hassled, and by now sore in need of a short calming half and handful of discreet pickles to steady my nerve; for my mind trawled through waters too turbid by far for the comfort of disgruntled eels; and deep in the breast pocket of my new lightweight kagool nestled my favour - the ring that I hoped would entice her to leave forever the sedge and withy and embark with me upon the mad fragile poetry of life in the Big City. "I'm nothing but a poor lad of ignoble birth," I'd say, dangling it before those bulging bilgey eyes and placing my hand upon her heart, "crude of manner and foul of foot, with not even one mildly interesting deformity to baffle your friends with in the dark at parties. But I'm fit, strong, lusty and thought-provoking, I've looked long and hard into the ways of fish and can strim a full-grown eel in 30 seconds flat given nothing more than a sharpened cocktail umbrella; so come, little Elvey, pack your prettiest galoshes and a decent mac and let us go froth together ("froth," she'd echo) armed, yes, only with our dreams, our love, and my pro-grade taunting-rod, but with my rod and your mother's set of graduated alloy buckets the world can truly be our hamster and never forget, from little oaks big acorns fall. Together we shall create Somerset's finest pilchard farm! Or maybe a 7"-only record-label. Either way, this chap in the Goat & Halfbrick last night said he could get us a really nice place in Taunton really near ASDA if we weren't that bothered about the rent and promised NEVER to look in the large cupboard under the stairs." But while I moved musing thus at a stiff trot across the bog toward that fabled inn, I met my goat, and fell.

But the goat was a creature of curious grace and displayed a nobility rare in such a lowly beast, especially a riled one. Or maybe it was just a bit pissed-off with things and couldn't see the point; for it simply gazed with eyes
