September 17th, to be precise, with interest-rates just back down to 10% after a few hours at 12 and a few at 15 - yikes - reality running up my spine again, I'm afraid - as Elton would say. Sorry, name-dropping...

Actually, speaking of Elt, it's at times like these - recessions and all the rest - that one feels, to be honest, least at ease with all that starchy celebrity stuff - I mean you have to do it, obviously - all the rock'n'roll partying, the mad licentious junketings, it comes with the job - but sometimes you just feel, I don't know, squalid, and sordid - morally defective. You just want to yell STOP. And these days it's more than just the morals and the waking up grubby, it's the economics of it - we're not a big label, after all, and Times are grown increasingly gristly; money's tight, and to be squandering it on such extravagances as 3 track 7"s, two colour inserts and wild orgiastic drug-fests seems, I don't know, somehow irresponsible. That's what the bank says, anyhow. They'd like us to chuck in our lot with the Creations and Factories of the world, have a final compromising stab at financial viability by submerging ourselves in all those terrible things that "proper" labels submerge themselves in - things like press-officers, digipaks, and fat old ex-members of Husker Du. And chummy chin-waggings and suckings-up and h-how's-it-goings with appalling media people, because THAT'S HOW IT'S DONE. Wooooooh.

But, to us, the fact that we're still moved to perform strange and immaculate pas de deux and dosi-dos upon hearing the newest recordings by our newest pop-stars is all that matters, not reviews and airplay - who CARES if the public mass is by-and-large composed of unsubtle thick-skinned oafs quite impervious to the miracle of poetry, we don't do it for them, we do it for ourselves, ourselves and those few small devastatingly beautiful people currently living out sadly beautiful lives upon the straggly rainy edges of endlessly clamouring cities whose emotional flames are still kindled and fanned by the fizz of a detuned guitar or the long-drawn ache of a cello

- to whom we'd like to say, thank you for reading -

- ahhhh, life in all its infinite mystery; the purity of all those single scary sacred moments like the moment you first discover how tamper-proof screws work* and wander round in a daze for weeks thereafter groggy with the sheer effrontery and audacity of the hip young dreamer who must first have thought of such a blindingly cool idea and gone into one of those large screw-factories you see about and said I have invented the tamper-proof screw and it works like this. But you can bet your bottom D that it was some archetypal management board-room type set-up who gave the final big yes seeing it as a way simply to grab yet more spendulicks and completely missing the awesome poetical moment, that little epiphany, the big WOW - maybe they didn't even bother to ask HOW it worked - Errrrr, I forget what point I was trying to make...

* each half of the groove only has one edge - the anticlockwise edge is missing, so if you try to turn the screwdriver anticlockwise the blade has nothing to bear against.
