I don't know if you've noticed, but our 7" have started coming in plastic bags again, just like in the old days when everybody hated us. Why so, you ask, quite reasonably. Well - basically it's all to do with the recent runaway success of "Feral Pop Frenzy". And, more particularly, an NME review which promised that "these madcap Australians" were "destined to break the Sarah mould". You see - having long-despaired of EVER breaking that mould, we suddenly sensed here a golden opportunity; but it needed more than one band, it needed A MOVEMENT...

And our bands haven't let us down. Why, only last week I witnessed the first crate-load of inflatable wombats being delivered to Blueboy HQ. And, whenever I think back to that cold February morning on the banks of The Aire, and Gentle Despite surfing down through Leeds with their didgeridoos flapping in the breeze, I fill with unspeakable pride. Hot toddies and steaming baths straight after, of course, but the photos made it all worthwhile. Lads - we salute you. But it's the band behind this very 7" who've taken it furthest, and to whom we truly take off our hats (carefully not tangling the corks), for nothing short of complete body transplants and re-location to a new home in the Melbourne suburb of Montrose was good enough for The Sugargliders - the place chosen in honour of their old Scottish birthplace, of course. And already they have learnt to look down their noses at Sydney folk such as EAWS. Or should that be up, being Antipodean?

But of course there's a downside to all this and, although The Press now love us, The Kids are frankly appalled; one could almost wish we'd never had them. So, to placate our oldest, truest fans, the plastic bags have returned. We're also arranging some little commemorative events - mostly invitation-only, but write now and you could for instance be one of the lucky 3 or 4 complete strangers chosen to meet in a cold dark room and shiver unhappily in your duffle-coat for 3 hours in celebration of those heady far-off days when not going to see St.Christopher at the Falcon was almost a way of life...
