Over a cup of coffee in a small unobtrusive cafe behind the market she said to me: "But that's just it, that's the whole point - it is all just down to luck in the end! If Fate smiles on you, well - lucky you! Fame, good health, untold riches and an endless succession of lean and powerful lovers will be yours! And if it doesn't - a cow will sit on your head tomorrow afternoon. But there's no point complaining..."

And that was her all over - happy-go-lucky, unfazed by whatever life threw at her; it's a great way to be, if you can avoid her unhealthy and curious preoccupation with farm animals, and a lot of it's rubbed off. Take today - a sunny spring morning, the flowering currant a mass of magenta blossom (see previous leaflet for a discussion on this) below my window, white clouds scudding merrily high above the city, the cat digging happily away under the conifers (and very sweet it looks too in those ear-muff things and its little shoulders going up and down) - and, goodness, the fact that people keep going but owing us money, or that shops like to have a quick giggle by pretending not to have heard of any of our bands, or that the brake pedal is never quite where you think it is (incidentally, if any of you happen to work in Insurance and can beat £1470 from AA Autoquote, please get in touch - one drawback of working in the "entertainments industry" (no, really - even Tramway) is that insurance-companies have this idea we spend our whole lives raring from one party to the next, burning up the M40 in the small hours gulping down hallucinogens with a game of Strip Celebrity Travel Scrabble going on in the back - and it's really mostly not like that at all; we just sometimes get the pedals muddled, and occasionally think they're purple frogs and don't like treading on them.) - um well, what's it really matter? If, at the end of the day, people would rather listen to, say, SUGAR (to pick a photo at random from the dashboard) then, hey, no big deal, people have always been daft. And if a cow comes and sits on our heads well, it probably just means it's going to rain.
