Our corner-shop ("Solanki Stores" - for newspapers, magazines & provisions. Videos to hire and blank videos at competitive prices. Open until 9pm.)* has recently had to start keeping its cream eggs UNDER THE COUNTER for fear of thievery; and I was thinking just how easy it'd be to use this as a basis for some right-wing diatribe - you know, "crime and the moral vacuum" - how every day brings news of yet more robberies, muggings and assaults, of old folks beaten up in their homes and unmarried couples leaving babies unattended while they pop off to Marbella -

But of course it's juvenile crime that proves most emotive - kids supposedly growing up with no concept of good or evil, of right and wrong - and people get on their hobby-horses and blame the parents, the schools, or television's cartoon violence - and many, of course, bring up RELIGION, claiming a few minutes each day devoted to instilling good Christian values would solve it all.

But here at SARAH, where obviously we're slightly more in touch with young people than, say, Simon Mayo, I'm not so sure; I find it hard to be so bleak. Perhaps it's because I'm a scientist by training, and thus not much given to vague metaphysical rumblings about the state of the human soul - if I see a mixed-infant trying to set light to a poodle then I put it down not to lack of prayers in assembly but to natural curiosity, a project perhaps on the comparative flammabilities of different breeds. Or perhaps - deep breath - it's just because the folk who buy our records always seem somehow intrinsically much NICER - not at all the sort you'd expect to find dismantling a shop-front or dismembering an aged relative; and then I start to wonder: were they like this before they found SARAH, or is it something we've instilled TN them over 5 1/2 years of Brighter, Heavenly and Secret Shine?

Er - I don't know if any of you have ever noticed how, compared to other label's records, ours tend to - how can I put this - "glow"? Makes you think, doesn't it...
