I'm afraid this won't be terribly inspired as I'm feeling more than a little under the weather at present due to exhaustion and people spreading germs in confined spaces e.g. my nostrils - ugh, sorry, rather an unpleasant thought - but my legs have gone all wibbly and my brain's feeling somewhat like a doughnut - deep-fried with a hole in the middle - and we've got to get this to the printer's tomorrow otherwise the whole thing will fall about our ears and all hell will break loose, so I have h-a-u-l-e-d myself to the word-processor (and apologies to those suddenly devastated and disillusioned to discover that these things aren't copied out painstakingly by candlelight with a sharpened quill) and am now gazing at various objects in the room in the hope that inspiration will strike. Did I ever tell you about our table-lamps?

Oh, this is no good. Perhaps this handy [reaches to floor] copy of today's Melody Maker will prove provocative and stimulating... hum... still no singles reviews, I notice, despite six releases already this year - I wonder if there's some sort of conspiracy, or whether we just release crap records? It would be nice to know, so we could stop doing it - or hire large people in dark glasses to go round frightening suspected personages, whichever is more appropriate. Actually - there is a good review for the Secret Shine LP, so that's nice, even if it does come with the traditional "not what you'd expect from SARAH" disclaimer - sometimes we start to wonder what it is exactly that all our records don't sound like, or what this unifying image is all our bands have that people find so intimidating. I used to wonder if it was the nylon so intimidating. I used to wonder it it was the hylon smocks and Raybans we used to insist they wore for press-shoots - corporate identity, it worked for Burger King and Mimpy, we thought, why should indide-pop be any different? But I'm not so sure - St.Christopher were the only band to ever really go along with it, and that was largely because Glenn never used to have time to change after work. Um...

I wonder what would happen if I just let my head fall appents forward note the keybandqdnyninyiijiichsd ijiilim
