Of course, people are already writing to complain that medieval British history has no part to play in contemporary pop, and that the views of Bristol's historic Castle Green (see SARAH 81 insert for a brief introduction - or try the Tourist Information on Narrow Quay) currently adorning our 7" labels are but further evidence of our increasing failure to empathise with the typical pop-kid - "Do you really think," they ask, "that a dingy photo of a fragment of 11th century wall has anything remotely to do with popmusic? K Records would never put an 11th century wall on their labels, so how can it possibly be right?"

I used to have the same trouble with my fanzines. What has this (unused) return train-ticket got to do with popmusic, people would say; or why does your so-called Talulah Gosh article consist almost entirely of a description of a journey on an N96 night-bus to Walthamstow? Where's the popmusic in that? (And how DARE you spell words correctly and make it readable, don't you know anything about popmusic? You're supposed to stick badly photocopied strips onto a badly photocopied background - that's what a fanzine looks like, and YOU'RE NOT FOLLOWING THE RULES...)

Here we see in the foreground the castle keep itself, and the war-damaged shell of St. Peter's Church behind.
