Moreover, the positive/negative effect used on the labels of these records represents not just the light and dark sides of Bristol's history (e.g. that for every Robin Cousins or I.K.Brunel there's a vicious slave-trader, tobacco baron, or Gerard Langley), nor even the light and dark sides of SARAH (and some of you I know find it hard to reconcile the way we sometimes snap at you on the phone with the merry creatures you encounter selling T-shirts at gigs, always ready with a playful quip and a plausibly amusing reason for The Field Mice having split-up) - no, it's more the essentially Dualistic nature of LIFE ITSELF.

In Iceland the other day I came upon their new white chocolate choc-ices - this is Iceland the frozen-food giant, not the north Atlantic island - and I thought you know, with a pack of these and a pack of the more traditional dark choc, you could engineer a wonderful game of draughts - and I thought then of how, as the ice cream melted, it would become a race against time better than any chess-clock and - suddenly I felt very small as it sunk in that man's existence truly is just grains of sand and that the real question of our age isn't simply does God exist but does he like his eggs hard or soft? For a soldier is a soldier, whether it's a Christian one or not.
