Little bit of a winter wonderland here in Bristol this morning - snowy rooftops, frosted trees, all rather lovely I reckon, though the cat is (typically) already thoroughly fed up with the whole business, and just plods about looking glum and speckly. But then, she's a dull unpoetic animal, much given to big sulks over trivial little things like milk or not being allowed to sit on sleeve-artwork - she's got such a small-scale mind, I find it endlessly depressing, and can sometimes scarcely believe she's ours, us who constantly rage inside with a pure untapped beauty.
 Ah, I forget - I'm writing this in late November, and you won't actually get to read it until JANUARY - but that's the way with the music industry - we either stay two jumps ahead, or we go under. People who stay only one jump ahead get leapfrogged. People who refuse to jump get jumped on. People who hop get sent back to the start and forfeit two goes. That's life, and it's tough.

And yet - this Yuletide, which for me hasn't yet happened but which for you is already a warm happy memory, I wonder if, just for one tiny moment, as you settled back bloated and content to hear Her Majesty address The Commonwealth, if it crossed your mind that some of us were even then hard at work folding sleeves, working out April release dates, and finalising details of The Grand Sarah Easter Bunny Hunt, for which tickets are now available?
