Drifting inexorably summer-wards, as we are, means it's probably a good time to mention - pausing briefly to strap on the cat's Kool Bags and pack her off once more to Iceland for choc-ices and special-offer frozen desserts - that we've decided to pull out of the T-shirt market; basically because we're fed up with them and they're more hassle than they're worth. Call us petty and small-minded if you want, but sometimes we get like this about things - 3 years ago it was The Field Mice, today it's T-shirts. They have a lot in common. Except, of course, that you could never pull The Field Mice over your head or shove them in the tumble-drier, much as you might occasionally have wanted to. Anyway - T-shirts: basically, unless somebody (i.e. Heavenly) decides to do a major tour in the near future, it's curtains for T-shirts. Sorry if this ruins your plans for posing skimpily about the sea-front this summer... you could always wear a Vinyl Japan one instead; they're similar to ours, only without the style.

This is also the last of our 'Castle Park' series of label photos - the turret at the end of the north rampart. If you look carefully, you should be able to make out Poundstretcher across on the other side of the moat, and Pizza Hut on the corner of Penn Street. Neither of these are the original medieval structures, of course. And the turret itself was once much taller - it was worn down to the present sorry stump by centuries of stubborn conflict. Did I ever mention what it was like working with The Field Mice? I used to be 6'10", you know. Both of us did...
