Mapping Road swing-bridge - the ferry pulls up at those steps on the right - the same steps, actually, as those from which the photo gracing the cover of "Engine Common" was taken; and, if you have that sleeve to hand, you'll be interested to know that the building behind the cranes is currently housing our Jurassic Park Dinosaurs exhibition - I've not actually been, on the grounds I don't want to, but I did spot that NCP have set-up a "Jurassic Car-Park" next door, which I thought was rather cute. Incidentally, I used to work for NCP, and I don't recommend it; low pay, 8 1/2 hour shifts with no break, scary working conditions (no window locks, no internal safe...) - and they don't like unions. Even if they do have a soft spot for dinosaurs. Oh and DON'T USE THE LIFTS!!! Sorry, I'm coming on like all those people who take jobs in restaurants and then say they'd never eat there again now they've seen what really goes in the lobster p te (as in: "there's still lobster this left, shall I shove it in the blender?"); or life-guards who never want to swim again once they've seen just how wet people can get; or me not wanting to be in band now I've seen the way labels treat them. Conversely, I'd recommend being a record-label to anyone - drink, drugs and sex on tap, top journalists at your beck and call, AND you get to pull faces at people when they're trying to sing really emotional bits, because if they argue back you just threaten to not release it. A fine life indeed.
