Well, here we are, just upstream from the SS Great Britain which is, of course, one of Bristol's premier tourist attractions, though it's never done much for me - I can't abide all this nostalgia-trip crap, I want things that are explosive and new, like Canary Wharf, Waterloo International, or this Boyracer 7" that's fizzing quietly in the background... And yet, of course, deep in my heart I know that SARAH's destined to end up just the same, as just yet more grist to the Heritage Industry mill; that even now people are buying our records not because they actually LIKE them, but because they know that one day the curator of some poxy indie-pop theme-park museum will pay good money for them... I can see it now, the bank-holiday crowd filing through on some drab rainy May afternoon, yawning awkwardly at the animated wax models of Heavenly's soundman Dick, toying listlessly with puerile Tetris-style virtual-reality games in which you have to fit a bass amp, 2 guitars and a drum kit into the back of a hired Vauxhall Astra double-parked outside the Princess Charlotte... and fidgeting stickily in a hushed auditorium as a doddery old man in white gloves gingerly places a tiny black disc onto something he terms a "turntable" and explains, in misty-eyed reverence, what life was like back in the nineties, when all that kids looked for on a Saturday night was a handful of speed, a tube of cheap mascara, and the chance of one last non-stop pogo-ing adventure with Boyracer...
