OK then, we concluded our last little essay with the phrase "I'm sure you know what I'm trying to say" - um, for those who didn't see it, I'd basically been ruminating gloomily upon what I saw as the depressing timidity of the modern human spirit by way of a complex seafaring metaphor in which a £1.80 round-trip on Emily-the-harbour-ferry represented the usual aimless trudge through from youth to old-age, while the misty South Wales coast symbolized the spicy allure of The Great Unknown - the exotic home, as it were, of that hooded figure in the darkness at the foot of your hammock each night beckoning you to join him with a sudden flash of naked flesh - but I shan't go into it all again as you can send £2 for your own copy (N.B. includes free 7"). My point was simply that lots of you wrote to say that actually, no, you didn't have a clue what I was trying to say, but (that aside) didn't we think it'd be more sensible to write what speed records played at in the labels rather than just obscurely hinting at it in small type at the bottom of the sleeve. I think this probably says it all - people just aren't interested in exploring Life's big scary themes anymore, and today's teenager no longer expects to find satori inside a 7" polythene bag, just a lump of round plastic. The world's moved on since SARAH began, and suddenly we find we don't know who to blame anymore. The Tories? The Pope? Teenage Fanclub?

Oh, all right then, we'll blame Teenage Fanclub...
