

I feel I spend my whole life apologising at the moment, so it seems a bit silly to stop now, just when it's become a mere mechanical response, requiring no emotional input and carrying no real implication of remorse, so - "sorry", because this should have been out well before now... as, indeed, should the new Harvey album (see below), and I promised you months ago that a new newsletter was imminent, copies of which could be rushed to your doorsteps by breathless indie postmen, provided you let us know where your doorsteps were located (i.e. house number, postcode etc., not just "between the front door and the pavement, you can't miss it"). The world being the way it is, however - roughly spherical but flattened at the poles, with a rigid outer crust separated from the mostly rocky mantle by the Mohorovicic Discontinuity, and further down a molten outer-core of iron and nickel kept liquid by the hot breath of the dinosaurs living in the hollow interior - nothing went quite to plan. As you can now see, though, the Monograph single's finally ready, Harvey's on his way, and... I've started the newsletter... honest...

So - yes, a new Monograph 7", and there's also a CD including all 4 songs from the classic Paper Museum 7", which has pretty much sold out now, which is why I called it a classic. And they're going to play live! - just in the north London area for now, as that's where they're from, and only getting paid a fiver doesn't matter so much if all you need to get home after is a single to Wood Green. We're also toying with some sort of LP... but obviously all this depends on how things go in the immediate future, so please feel free to let us know how unbounded your love is or, if bounded, then by what, exactly. I was thinking of handing round sticks of chalk at the gigs and getting you to mark the precise extent of the bounds on the floor, but I'll brood on that. It might just be silly.
